Dear Dr. Keith Kent,

Thank you for your wonderful products, Kiss Care and Kiss Cote. As owner of Wild Life On Easy Street, Inc., a sanctuary for big cats, we have found many uses for your marvelous "miracle spray" as we commonly refer to it here. When an animal or a person gets bitten, scratched or scraped, it is the first thing we look for in the medicine chest. The following are a few incidents which occurred and were greatly improved through the use of your product.

A 200 pound Leopard leaped 24 feet and was caught in mid air by my husband, Don Lewis. The cat was smiling and had his mouth wide open as he flew through the air. As he landed, his top canine tooth caught on Don's neck. The weight and impact caused the tooth to slice deeply across my husband's throat. The gash was so bad that we thought surely his head would fall off, but Don, typical to his nature, refused to see a Doctor. The only thing in our medicine box that we felt safe with was your Kiss Care. We sprayed it several times daily and affixed bandages at intervals across the wound to hold the skin together, yet allow it to breathe. While we would never recommend that someone treat themselves in such a serious situation, we would like to praise Kiss Care for aiding in healing and would suggest it in addition to medical treatment.

Boots, a old and crotchety domestic cat got into it with a raccoon and the coon won. Boots suffered a nasty bite to the head and face. Her veterinarian administered antibiotics and said to leave the wound open to heal. We sprayed her regularly with the Kiss Care and the wound never did get infected or parasitized and the healing was quick and is now undetectable. The fur grew back quickly and now Boots is working on her "next life".

Nakita, a rare and beautiful White Tiger was here for boarding. She was badly inbred and apparently had little or no feeling in her tail. One cold morning she was chasing her tail, as was her habit and she accidentally sunk her claws into the flesh, ripping it open. She fussed over her tail incessantly after that and the problem became worse and worse. Her owner would not allow our Veterinarian to treat the cat and would not call one of her own, so we used the Kiss Care to seal the wound and give it a chance to heal. We felt it was the safest product to use in an area that would be constantly licked by the cat. The tail has not only healed, but the fur has grown back and the damage can no longer be detected.

MyKinga, a two month old baby and lion and Elsa, a four month old baby lion were being introduced to each other as life long mates. They had to have a fence between them, until it could be determined that they would not kill each other, but both were so eager to check out the other, that they rubbed raw, oozing spots on their noses and eyebrows. Again, Kiss Care to the rescue.

Kaluah, a very old Margay was clawed in the eye by her mate. She is not tame, and would not allow me to administer any sort of ointment to her face so I tried spraying the Kiss Care in my own eyes. The spray was soothing, so I sprayed her for three days and the eye healed beautifully. A few days later a couple of female Bobcats got into a scrape over a male, and the smaller one was bitten in the eye and nose. Again, we used the Kiss Care and in just a few days the wounds had healed without a trace.

Exotic kittens have very fragile immune systems and contract every little sneeze or snuffle that floats through. We have found that spraying their eyes with Kiss Care while they are being treated antibioticly for upper respiratory problems, seems to greatly reduce the need for eye ointments. Kittens are always biting and scratching each other as they are learning their limitations, and these wounds always receive Kiss Care above all else.

The autofocus, telephoto lens on my Nikon would not slide freely. I took it to a camera shop and they said that the lens was a self contained unit and that it was not repairable. The only other option was to purchase a new ($600.00) lens. Since I was told that my lens was no good, I pulled it out to it's full length, sprayed it with Kiss Cote, wiped it with a hanky and it has been working just perfectly for several months. I use this lens almost daily by the way.

We have successfully treated every imaginable cat fight, and human interaction with you product. We have been bitten by Otters, Binturongs, many of the cats, raccoons, and that doesn't even get in to all of our construction incidents, such as smashed fingernails, nail holes, wire scrapes and exhaust burns that we have used your product for. It is simple and painless to apply and we have never encountered an infection while using your product. We are very pleased with Kiss Care and Kiss Cote and hope that it will be available for years to come.
